Portfolio and Market Commentary

Like experiencing a summer storm during one’s vacation, markets were caught off guard this past month, experiencing severe turbulence on several levels. At the ultimate macro level, talk of global economic slowdown has heated up worldwide, noted by the JPM Global Manufacturing PMI sliding into contraction.

For equity markets, bubbles have been pricked in EV and now AI trends, here to fore market leaders. For bond and currency markets, underlying weakness in US employment finally appeared to surface, repricing greater Fed policy rate cuts near term. While the US interest curve has flattened around 4%, it was in the spirit of governments continuing to show desperation, Japan decided to raise interest rates. The global combination led to huge moves in dollar yen, unwinding the mother of all carry trades, at least for the time being.

After two years of record Fed hikes and even worse inflation, pain is seeping through the system. Other negative trends persist: insane deficit spending in the US, where interest on its debt becomes its biggest outlay; continued dumping of UST for gold (Japan, BRICs); supply chain impediments (see container rates), from Ukraine-Russia, Israel-Gaza, Panama Canal drought and the Houthi’s Red Sea. None of this speaks to politics, with the US uncertainly of who would run, let alone win and lead post-November?

And yet-like a passing of a storm, all reverts to calm? US money supply appears to have bottomed; inflation recedes slowly but still high, particularly from Services, while oil prices remain range-bound.

For credit, turbulence has yet to diminish persistent tailwinds. Companies refinanced at the lows of the zero-interest rate world the last few years, combine with significant balance sheet repair across several industries, from energy to shipping to airlines. And it’s clear outliers are not participating: consumer discretionary, commercial real estate and likely, steel producers.

The Fund experienced solid performance during the month, primarily from yield, as we cautiously reinvest in attractive credit opportunities. Themes continue across energy, shipping, autos, telecoms and more idiosyncratic financials.
