Portfolio and Market Commentary

Markets held surprisingly firm the past month, beginning a seasonally torturous 'Fall on a strong note, as the dream of an economic soft landing pervades, for now.

US & EM growth remain surprisingly robust, but stubborn inflation trends endure. Interestingly, just as heretofore sticky US housing costs look to fade, deflationary goods and food prices seem to have bottomed, making the Fed's efforts to predict trends going forward quite difficult. As long as employment stays stable, they retain the option of prolongating anticipated reductions in rates.

For equities, recent growth has trumped, with many indices enjoying the best year to date performance in decades. For yields, reduced expectations of Fed rate cuts have led to both short and long rates rising back toward 4%.

Most recently, all eyes have been on the China command and control reflation machine, incorporating a serious (dead cat?) bounce in domestic equities, from quite oversold conditions, boosting hope for commodities. One needs to remember recovery from China's infrastructure binge-turned hangover is a medium-term process, not easily resolved in a few quarters or even years. Coupled with a drive toward a services economy, consumption will need to be both incentivised and boosted. We'll be watching M1 for effects of the government stimulus surely to come.

Energy-related themes similarly have bounced off year lows, further assisted by spreading ME war tensions, while, somewhat relatedly, shipping rates looked to come off another spike, yet held up by the same tensions and bottlenecks.

For credit, many of these cross currents have balanced. Growth tailwinds persist, reflected in improved creditworthiness, resulting in spread tightness, though nothing to compared to frenzied equity valuations, while to us, yields remain attractive, both on a nominal and credit-adjusted quality basis.

The Fund continues to enjoy solid performance, attributable to yield, as we cautiously reinvest in attractive credit opportunities. Themes continue across energy, shipping, transportation, telecoms and more idiosyncratic financials.
